Pickled Pepper Theatre opened in September of 2018 and is a quirky, small-scale children's and parent's theatre space behind a bookshop in Crouch End. Our space was created to provide a relaxed and informal theatre to showcase quirky and inclusive shows for the children and parents of North London. We have a large mailing list and social media following, and since opening we have sold out nearly all our shows that we have curated for the space – specifically choosing those that align with our branding of fun and diversity! We are open to productions that aren't specifically for children as long as they are family-friendly.

The space is a flexi-space, equipped with two LED lights and soft, warm house lighting that we keep on for the shows to ensure our space remains relaxed and friendly for neurodiverse children. The capacity is 40 audience members with children sat on the floor on faux grass and cushions, and the space can be in the round, end-on, or immersive. We have a PA system. The space is connected (but separated by doors) to a working bookshop, so there is a chance of noise bleed, however customers will rarely be loud as they are mainly browsing books.

We provide FOH staff for the performances and social media support. Pickled Pepper Theatre is available for morning and afternoon slots Monday – Saturday throughout the whole of Camden Fringe – however if a company has a specific idea of an evening show that would work in the space, we are happy to have a conversation about programming it in. Companies must provide their own technical operator. Venue Hire is £40 + VAT
